Chennai is filled with traditional temples which are made from rocks

There are roads that are adjacent to the seashore and the drive through is one of the most pleasant experiences that I had experienced in my city

Chennai's railway station is very famous as it depicts European Architecture

This one of the flyovers, it is shaped like a flower

It rains heavily in the winter season

TEXT DESCRIPTION

Walking through Chennai, one can remember the numerous rock temples, beaches and traditional lifestyle of the people. The traffic in Chennai is relatively better compared to neighboring states because some roads only have unidirectional traffic. There are multiple flyovers all over the city to make the traffic better, they are in different designs and shapes. Amidst the housing and commercial buildings, the presence of temples and a few lakes breaks the continuity of building structures – these are spaces where the public congregates for relaxing and spending time with each other. Beaches of Chennai have also become the most important part of peoples lives for recreation. The Marina beach is the 2nd longest beach in Asia and a road runs parallel to it.
